

Matt Flynt is a graduate of the University of Arkansas at Little Rock, where he earned a Bachelor of Science degree in Biology and Chemistry. He entered the cattle industry in 2000 while working as a farm manager and fisheries biologist for a large commercial aquaculture facility. Matt currently operates a cow–calf operation, retaining ownership of calves through weaning and backgrounding. He has hosted numerous tours and educational workshops on his operation in cooperation with NRCS, the Grazing Lands Conservation Initiative (GLCI), and the Arkansas Forage and Grassland Council (AFGC). He has served on the boards of these organizations. A first-generation farmer and rancher, Matt has been recognized as an Arkansas Farm Bureau Young Farmer and Rancher finalist, a 2012 County Farm Family of the Year, and the 2012 Arkansas Cattlemen’s Association Cow–Calf Producer of the Year.
